Real estate agent raped waiting to show home

A Rock Hill real estate agent was raped over the weekend in a home she planned to show to a friend, according to the Rock Hill police.

The incident happened around 9:30 a.m. Saturday at a house in the 300 block of South Jones Avenue, a police report stated.

Police learned of the allegations shortly before 10:20 a.m. when a woman flagged down the responding officer and told him that her 33-year-old friend, a real estate agent, had been assaulted.

The friend said the agent had come to the address to show her a real estate listing, the report stated.

The friend told the officer that when the agent went in the home, before the friend arrived, a man hiding inside confronted her, the report stated. The man, whose identity is unknown, then forced the agent to the ground and raped her inside the home, according to the report.

When police tried to talk to the victim, she would not tell them what happened and could not give them a detailed physical description of her attacker, the report stated. The victim was obviously shaken and wanted to leave, the report stated.

After the victim left, a forensic unit investigated. The victim's mother took her Riverview Medical Center where she was seen by a sexual assault nurse.

Police had not made any arrests in the case late Monday afternoon, said Rock Hill police Lt. Jerry Waldrop.

Waldrop said police are asking anyone who noticed anything suspicious in the area Saturday morning to please call the Rock Hill Police Department at 329-7200 or Crime Stoppers of York County at 1-877-409-4321.
