A Carroll County man faces charges after reportedly confessing to assaulting a real estate agent earlier this year in Sykesville.

Maryland State Police identified the man as Kent E. Stover, 37, of Sykesville. Police said that after an interrogation, Stover confessed late Sunday to assaulting a real estate agent. He faces charges of first-and second-degree assault.

Troopers said the investigation began on April 15 when Stover allegedly walked through a model home unaccompanied in the 700 block of Old Liberty Road in Sykesville. Authorities said that Stover then struck a female real estate agent on the head using a decorative metal ball displayed inside the house.

Troopers said Stover ran from the home, leaving in his vehicle. Investigators said they interviewed another female real estate agent at a different house off Martz Road where Stover allegedly visited several months prior to the alleged assault on Old Liberty Road.

The second woman told police she saw Stover traveling in a green sport utility vehicle. She then saw Stover on Sunday while working in the same model home, police said, driving the same SUV.

She called police and followed the SUV, and along with a resident of the development who was aware of reports of the alleged assault, blocked Stover's SUV using their own vehicles.

Stover has been released pending trial.
